For Immediate Release

Frances G. Stamper has joined the Cleveland Museum of Art as manager of public relations and membership.

Miss Stamper comes to Cleveland from Houston where since 1968 she has worked as public relations consultant, primarily in the fields of architecture and the visual arts. In this capacity she has worked with such organizations as the Institute for the Arts at Rice University, the Rothko Chapel, the Menil Foundation, the Houston Urban Bunch community design center, and others.

From 1965 until 1968 she was associated with the University of St. Thomas in Houston, directing regional public relations activities for the school's art gallery and related arts programs.

Her background in public relations and communications spans 16 years, and includes experience in corporate and institutional fields.

A native of Washington, D. C., Miss Stamper is a graduate of the University of Texas, and holds a B.A. degree in English. She is a member of Women in Communications.
